Q.2 Write a précis of the following passage: (5 Marks)

In the modern world, people often talk about progress, development, and the rapid growth of technology. While these advancements have certainly made life more convenient, they have also created new challenges that cannot be ignored. One of the biggest problems is the growing sense of isolation among individuals. People are more connected through mobile phones and social media than ever before, yet they feel lonelier and more emotionally distant. Instead of meeting friends or family in person, many individuals prefer to communicate through messages or online platforms, which cannot replace real human interaction.

Another major issue is the increasing pressure to succeed. From a very young age, students are pushed to excel in studies, sports, and various competitions. Adults, too, face constant stress at workplaces due to high expectations and tight deadlines. This continuous pressure affects mental health, leading to anxiety, depression, and burnout. Unfortunately, society often values achievements more than well-being, causing people to overlook the importance of rest and emotional balance.

Environmental degradation is another concern linked to modern lifestyles. As industries expand and cities grow, forests are being destroyed, rivers polluted, and wildlife threatened. People are aware of these problems, yet only a few take meaningful action to protect nature. The desire for comfort—such as air-conditioning, private vehicles, and packaged goods—has increased energy consumption and waste production. If this continues, future generations may face serious consequences, including scarcity of natural resources and drastic climate changes.

Lastly, modern life has also affected traditional values. In the pursuit of wealth and convenience, qualities such as patience, empathy, and gratitude are gradually diminishing. People are becoming more focused on material success rather than personal relationships and moral values. As a result, families are drifting apart, and communities are losing their sense of unity.

Although modern progress has brought many advantages, it is important to maintain balance. People must recognize the value of mental health, environmental protection, and strong human relationships. Only by combining technological advancement with emotional and social awareness can society move toward a future that is both prosperous and fulfilling.
